BIOGRAPHICAL/HISTORICAL NOTE

Born in Cairo, Illinois on October 31, 1892, from the age of twelve he was raised in Demopolis, Alabama. He graduated from the University of Alabama in 1913 and earned his M.A. at Columbia University in 1914. He taught at Syracuse University before coming to the University of Alabama in 1916. He taught there until his retirement in 1963.

While teaching at the University, Dr. Strode began a class in creative writing which achieved international fame for the literary successes achieved by its members and graduates. Strode's students published over 55 novels, 101 short stories, and countless articles. The London Times once referred to his creative writing class as "brilliantly effective."

So successful was the creative writing class that J. B. Lippincott, publishers, awarded between 1941 and 1945 a $1,000 annual prize for the best novel submitted for publication from his class. Many of his former students described Dr. Strode as the motivating factor and inspiration for their works. He was also famous for his brilliant lectures and classes in Shakespeare.

From 1932-1975, he published 16 books of his own, the first six of these dealing with a commentary on foreign countries including Mexico, Bermuda, Denmark, Finland, Sweden, and the Far East. His works have been translated into more than six languages. In 1955, with the aid of the Confederate president's private letters, Strode wrote his classic biography of Jefferson Davis. He was the first person outside the Davis family to see the letters. Strode wrote three complete volumes of the biography and a fourth volume of selected and edited letters. After the works were completed, the Davis family donated 639 letters written by and to Jefferson Davis to the University of Alabama Library.

Dr. Strode's last major work, The Eleventh House, was an autobiography from 1882 to 1939. In the book, Dr. Strode told of encounters with such literary figures of the 1920's and 1930's as Eugene O'Neill, F. Scott Fitzgerald, H. L. Mencken, and Ernest Hemingway. Another volume of the work was planned tracing Dr. Strode's life from 1939 to the present, but because of failing health, he did not complete the task.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The collection consists of correspondence, typed manuscripts, proof sheets, clippings and reviews, periodicals containing articles by and about Hudson Strode, and photographs. The papers also include some research materials for his biographical work on Jefferson Davis (see also Davis Papers) and miscellaneous notes on several of his other books. Among the more notable of Dr. Strode's correspondents were:

Aldous Huxley, H. L. Mencken, Sigrid Undset, Lady Astor, Stark Young, Lennart Bernadotte, Ellen Glasgow, Pearl Buck, Albert Spalding, Hugo Black, George Wallace, William Jovanovich, General A. C. Wedemeyer, Clifton Fadiman, and Alfred Knopf.

The correspondence has been separated into incoming and outgoing. Outgoing correspondence is arranged chronologically; incoming correspondence is arranged alphabetically. Correspondence from Strode to his wife, Therese is separated.

Other categories of correspondence which have been sorted include miscellaneous correspondence related to his research on Jefferson Davis, Therese Strode's incoming correspondence, and her outgoing correspondence to Strode. There is also a folder of unidentified correspondence.

Dr. Strode's literary manuscripts, reviews and proofs are sorted by type and title of publication. In some cases a complete manuscript and proofs are available, for others only fragments remain.

One series concerns Strode's Creative Writing Class and many famous members such as Borden Deal and Lonnie Coleman are included. These files contain clippings and reviews of works by class members.
